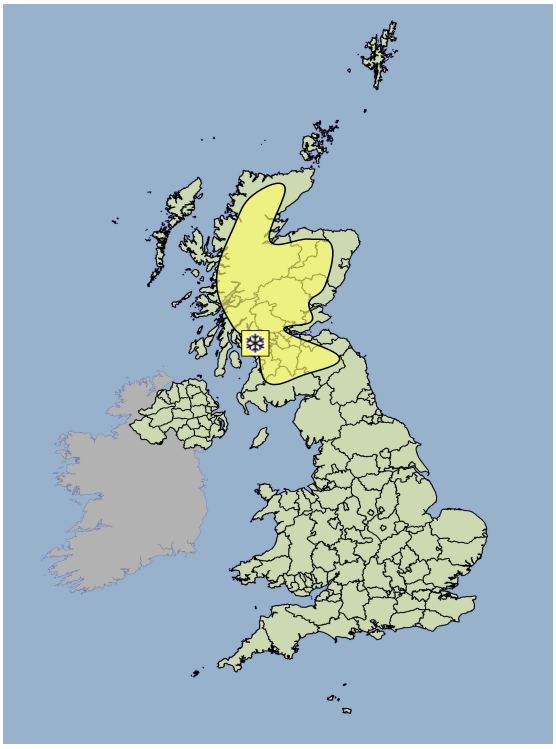
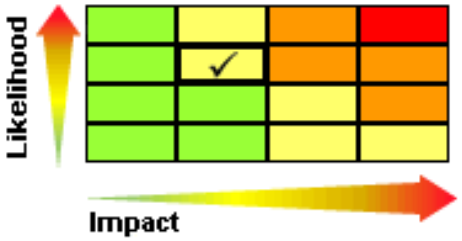
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A vigorous area of low pressure is expected to move northeast across the UK during Wednesday. The leading edge of the precipitation associated with this system will engage the cold air already established across Scotland. This will allow snow to develop quite widely. However, as less cold air pushes into southern Scotland later, snow here will change to rain, with any lying snow thawing rapidly.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 10:00 on Wed, 12th Feb 2014 until 21:00 on Wed, 12th Feb 2014

A band of rain, sleet and snow will push into Southern Scotland on Wednesday morning, spreading north to affect much of the mainland during the afternoon and evening. Accumulations of 10-15 cm are likely above around 300 m with 2-5 cm above around 100 m. Temporary accumulations of 1-2 cm are possible to low levels for a time on the leading edge. The snow will turn to rain at all levels across Southern Scotland and the Central Belt through Wednesday afternoon.
The public should be aware of the risk of some travel disruption and difficult driving conditions.
